Part two: Reading comprehension

Read the passage and answer the questions by choosing the best choice.

One of the most ancient civilizations was the one that began in the Tigris-Euphrates valley about 4000 BC. This civilization was formerly called the Babylonian or Babylonian-Assyrian civilization. It is now known, however, that the civilization was not founded by either the Babylonians or the Assyrians but by an earlier people called the Sumerians. It seems better, therefore, to use the name Mesopotamian to cover the whole civilization, even though the name Mesopotamia is sometimes applied only to the northern portion of the land between the two rivers.

The pioneers in the development of the Mesopotamian civilization were the people known as Sumerians, who settled in the lower Tigris-Euphrates valley between 5000 and 4000 BC. Their precise origin is unknown, but they seem to have come from the plateau of central Asia. They spoke a language unrelated to any now known, although their culture was somewhat similar to the earliest civilization of India. With little or no difficulty they subjugated the natives already in the lower valley.

26. How old is the civilization that began in the Tigris-Euphrates valley?
