Part two: Reading Comprehension .

Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow.

Communication informs when it alters the receiver's understanding of something or alters the types of choices a receiver might make. In this sense, communication is more than the transmission of facts and data. This is an important distinction which has been discussed, by a number of authors. For example, in Organizational Intelligence, Harold Wilensky differentiates between the transmission of data and the intelligence process. For Wilensky, this process involves "gathering, processing, interpreting, and communicating the technical and political information needed in the decision-making process." Thus, the critical feature separating data from meaningful information or "intelligence" is its relevance to the decision-making process. What a decision maker needs is not all the data, but all the relevant information.

28. According to the above passage, meaningful information process involve .....stages of necessary political and technical information for making decision.

- a. three                      b. four                      c. five                      d. six

29. The major distinction between the transmission of data and intelligence is in the .....

- a. receivers' understanding                      b. numbers of authors

c. decision making process                      d. decision making process
